

I join my fellow public radio colleagues in supporting NPR's Tomorrow Radio project. Supplemental Audio Channels offer public radio an opportunity to further diversify our programming services, and to get increased value from the infrastructure that has been built over time. The asset created here also increases public access by allowing us to offer new programming and format services.